

AND IF WE WENT TO LONDON ?

London is worth a visit. It's a big and beautiful city with lots to see and do.

Do find a guide if possible from London who loves her town and let yourself be carried ; Search a good hotel to regain strength ; Use different means of transport : bus, underground, boat and.....good shoes !

At random you will see and visit, maybe, Westminster Abbey, Big ben, Tower of London, The Royal Mews with royal coaches, Tower Bridge, in the City rise in the sky for a fantastic panoramic view at 360 degree or jump the meridian in Greenwich Park but also walking along river Thames see the Shakespeare Theater, go to the market for food and clothes and more unusual to Columbia Road where there is a colourful flower market on Sunday.

If you are stingy, enjoy, the National Gallery and Tate Modern it's free ! but Dennis Severs' House that makes enter us the previous century is not Free !

In the evening go to eat in a Pub to soak up the British spirit.

But if you're not going to Covent Garden or somewhere else, It does not matter you will come back !

A little personal advice : Do you not go alone but with a very small group, some people will be a good acquaintance and if something negative and unforeseen happens take it as a sign of destiny to open your humanity.

God save Claude.
